Madagascar President: I Won't Run in Next Election

AP Associated Press ANTANANARIVO, Madagascar January 16, 2013 (AP)

Madagascar President Andry Rajoelina says he won't run in the island nation's next presidential election.

The pledge made by Rajoelina Tuesday evening matches a promise by the former president of Madagascar, Marc Ravalomanana, who was overthrown in a 2009 coup. Ravalomanana pledged in December not to run, and regional government leaders were pressing Rajoelina to also not run.

Rajoelina said he preferred personal sacrifice than to sacrifice the people of Madagascar. There had been fears heavy violence would break out in the May election.
